WHAT CRAFTSMAN FURNITURE STANDS FOR

WITHIN the last twelve years the popularity of Craftsman furniture has increased so largely that it is now recognized as a national style. This is partly because it was intended primarily to fill, in the most direct and natural way, the actual needs of American home life, and partly because at the time it was put forward people were on the verge of an artistic awakening, a reaction against the insincerity and false ornateness of the furnishings of that period. The impetus of this movement, being in the direction of my own efforts, naturally helped to carry my work forward to success.

Today the word "Craftsman" has become established in the public mind as a synonym for simple, well made furniture, constructed on primitive lines, planned for comfort, durability and beauty, and expressing the spirit of true democracy.

The original pieces of Craftsman furniture were made in 1898. For two years I experimented and worked over the many problems of design, construction and finishing. In 1900 I exhibited my first Craftsman furniture to the general public at the Furniture Exposition in Grand Rapids, Michigan, with decidedly encouraging results. The following year it was again shown at the Pan-American Exposition, and from that time it found a welcome in the homes of the people.

Then there developed the making of the various furniture accessories—strong simple hinges, handles and pulls of iron, copper and brass. I also found that I needed just the right sort of leather and fabrics for cushions, table tops and chair seats, and so I studied and experimented with these materials until I discovered the sort of treatment they required to bring them into harmony with my furniture.

As the use of Craftsman furniture offered such interesting opportunities to develop an entire decorative scheme along the same lines, I gradually branched out from the metal and upholstery work into the making of electric lighting fixtures, lamps, candlesticks, fireplace fittings, trays, etc., and also curtains, portières, pillows, scarfs, with simple designs and colorings.

In all these things I have tried to get the best possible results, using only suitable materials and the best workmanship. I try always to work with the material rather than to force it to my own ends, to retain and emphasize the natural interest of grain, texture and color. For instance, the oak which I use has all been fumed and finished in a way that preserves the inherent beauties of the wood, with just enough color added to heighten the original effect. This finish, in fact, which I have worked so long to attain, is now recognized as the standard finish for which everyone is striving.

Most of my furniture was so carefully designed and well proportioned in the first place, that even with my advanced experience I cannot improve upon it. Month by month, of course, I am adding new pieces to fill some special need, but there are few changes in the original designs. For this reason people who are buying Craftsman furniture can feel that the pieces they purchase today will never go "out of style," but will be even more appropriate and beautiful as time goes on. A number of such new designs are shown here—among them being new tables, chairs of oak and willow, lighting fixtures and lamp shades. A full line of Craftsman furnishings is carried by our stores, the addresses of which are given on the front cover.

I feel sure the use of Craftsman furniture will continue to increase from year to year, for the reason that it provides the kind of home environment most suited to the real needs of our American democracy. And I care so much about the things I make that I want people to be happy with them.

HOW TO IDENTIFY CRAFTSMAN FURNITURE

CRAFTSMAN

TRADE MARKS REG'D

IN U. S. PATENT OFFICE

THE success of my furniture has given rise to many imitations, as well as to the too free application of the word "Craftsman." There is but one make of Craftsman furniture, and purchasers who wish to obtain the genuine should remember its very simple means of identification.

Every piece of furniture bears the word "Craftsman," with my shop-mark—joiners' compasses, enclosing the motto Als ik Kan—and the written signature "Stickley," all of which trade-marks are registered in the United States Patent Office.

In order to get the benefit of my work and reputation, imitators get as close to my trade-marks as they dare legally, and although such imitation is complimentary in a certain sense, it is apt to be misleading. To avoid, therefore, any possibility of confusion with other so-called "Stickley furniture"—for among the imitators are those who bear the same name as myself—it is well for purchasers to look always for the word "Craftsman" which appears on the tags and pasters attached to each piece that I make.

The Craftsman Workshops, where my furniture is made, are at Eastwood, N. Y., and I have no connection with any other factory. Each piece of furniture, before it leaves the factory, is provided with a tag, which carries the price at which the piece is to be sold in the store. Owing to the cost of transportation across the continent, it is necessary to have two price lists, one for the Eastern and one for far Western States.

On the inside of the front cover of this catalogue is a form of paster which is attached to each piece of furniture—usually underneath, as under the seat of a chair, beneath the top of a table or in a drawer. This paster carries the trade-marks previously referred to. I chose this motto and sign as a permanent means of identification for my furniture because they seemed to me to embody best the spirit and purpose of my work. The joiners' compasses, being one of the first and simplest of the cabinetmaker's tools, are symbolic not only of my craft, but also of my own attitude toward it; for it has been my aim to express fundamental principles in both design and workmanship, and to make furniture primarily strong, durable and comfortable, and to base whatever beauty might be attained upon sound structural qualities and the natural interest of the materials used. The motto—Als ik Kan (as I can)—which originated with one of the Flemish painters of the fourteenth century, Ian van Eyck, reflects that sentiment of courage and persistency which characterized the artists and craftsmen of the olden times, when a man's work, whether manual or intellectual, was held to be the noblest source of inspiration, growth and pride. It was this same legend that William Morris used, in its French form, Si je puis, after his visit to the Low Countries fired his enthusiasm for good craftsmanship. Its application to Craftsman furniture recalls the old-time ideals of thoroughness of workmanship, and expresses the earnestness of my endeavor to help put the art of furniture-making once more on a sound and sincere basis.

WILLOW FURNITURE: The right kind of willow furniture affords exactly the relief that is necessary to lighten the general effect of the darker and heavier oak pieces of Craftsman furniture. Our willow pieces, while strongly and firmly made, have yet the flexibility of a well woven basket. They are finished usually in soft green, deep golden brown, light golden brown, straw and natural color, although they may also be had in soft blue, gray and mahogany, if desired. In each case the color is more or less uneven, varying as it might in the growing willow.

The cushions are covered with our Craftsman canvas, flamme, Pompeian cloth and velour in tones to match the willow, also hand printed linens and cretonnes of our own designs and colorings. The prices quoted include cushions in any of the above materials except velour, which is somewhat more expensive. Samples of all our coverings will be sent on application.

Some of our latest models are shown on pages 50, 51 and 52. In addition to these we have many lower-priced willow pieces, descriptions of which will be given upon request.

LIGHTING FIXTURES: The lighting fixtures shown here are made in iron, copper and brass, the metal selected depending on the design of the piece and the decorative scheme in which it is to be used. The wrought iron is finished in a way known in England as "armor bright." This is an old finishing process used by English metal workers, which prevents the surface from rusting and brings out all the black, gray and silvery tones natural to iron. The lamp shades and domes can be obtained with either amber, straw-colored or crystal glass. The Japanese willow and bamboo shades, which can be purchased separately if desired, are illustrated and described on pages 59 and 60.

THESE Craftsman lamp shades are one of the most distinctive features of our lighting fixtures. They were originally intended for table lamps, either electric or oil, but we found them equally appropriate for ceiling lamps and for bracket fixtures on the side walls.

They are made for us in Japan from our own designs, of firmly woven willow lined with a heavy grade of Habutai silk in soft rich shades of red, green or dull gold, through which a mellow light is diffused.

The shades can be purchased separately as shown here, or with the lamps shown on other pages.
